Featured Positions

Chemistry, Qualified Patent Attorney, London £65-75,000

Enjoy an abundance of (mostly direct) work from Partners who want to entrust you to conduct all of the dealings with much of their current work load. It's a broad base of stuff, technically speaking, but you will also get a lot of time drafting patents as well as dealing with more contentious matters. This role has some serious progression opportunities attached to it, and whether you are newly qualified or 3-4 years pge you career options will be looked after.

Unconventional European Qualified Patent Attorney, Generalist, London, £55,000

Be blessed with a broad range of work across technical disciplines with a predominantly European spin on much of your efforts. The role would suit a non-conformist patent attorney seeking an opportunity just that little bit different, allowing an early opportunity to build your own portfolio whilst enjoying the security of a fully developed client base. If you qualified as a European Patent Attorney last year but don't feel a conventional role excites you anymore then look no further.

Other Opportunities:

Electronics Patent Attorney, Any Level, London £Negotiable

August private practice with an outstanding reputation for high-quality work. Supportive training environment, both for qualified and part-qualified Attorneys. Big-name direct clients and a good variety of work including prosecution and opposition.

Biotechnology, Qualified Patent Attorney, Manchester To £75,000

Preeminent private practice is searching for a qualified biotech Attorney to join their Manchester office. Benefit from a very enjoyable office environment, interesting and varied work and brilliant career progression opportunities.

Qualified Mechanical Patent Attorney, London To £70,000

Yes, a genuine mechanical Patent Attorney role. Not an electronics position masquerading as mechanical. Internal combustion engines, aeronautics, functional inventions, nothing digital here, analogue all the way. Would be ideal for a UK qualified Patent Attorney hoping for a busy work load in a highly regarded firm.

Chemistry, Qualified or Finalist, Southern England £Negotiable

Pragmatic firm with a client-centred approach and heaps of technical expertise. If you have a background in chemistry/materials science, the ability to cut through the jargon, and an excellent track record, you could go far here.

In-House Electronics, Qualified Patent Attorney, Home Counties

The size and scope of this global telecommunications giant will enable you to develop your career in a variety of directions (and locations). By definition, you will deal with cutting-edge technologies and have exposure to prosecution as well as opposition work. If you've got even a shred of global ambition, this is the job for you.

Biotechnology Patent Attorney, Any Level, London £Excellent

Bustling, forward-thinking private practice offering diverse high quality work and excellent career progression in a meritocratic environment. Although brimming with work, this firm actively encourages staff to engage in business development, too.

Electronics, Qualified Patent Attorney, London To £75,000

This firm anticipates growth, growth, and more growth, which is why they are looking to strengthen their electronics division with a new hire. Ideally you will be (recently) qualified and able to work autonomously within a busy yet friendly team.

Chemistry, Newly Qualified Patent Attorney, London To £63,000

This well respected and highly commercial private practice is seeking a newly qualified chemistry patent attorney to join their ranks. You will enjoy the stability of dealing with an established mix of interesting clients, as well as the challenge of developing your own client portfolio.

Mechanical/Electronics, Qualified or Finalist, London To £65,000

Leading firm of Patent Attorneys seeks a long-term investment; the right candidate with a mix of mechanical and electronics experience will have the opportunity to develop and grow within the firm – eventually into a partnership role.

Electronics, Qualified Patent Attorney, Manchester

Ever expanding private practice with a healthy growth rate across the UK. Aspiring to transparency and modernity, this firm does not hesitate to reward excellent performance with speedy career progression. With the supportive and encouraging environment at this firm, you'd have a hard time not developing your skills and client portfolio!
